

1. Scott shared about a time in his Christian life when he was basing his relationship with God out of lists of “do’s and don’ts” rather than love. Have you ever found yourself trying to relate to God in the same way? What did it look like in your life?
2. Scott also made the statement that many of us gravitate toward disguised lives rather than transformed lives. What are some of the reasons why you think that is true?
3. Which of the characteristics of transformation (people being saved; boldly sharing the gospel; fear God rather than man; willing to suffer) would you most like to see present in your own life? Why?
4. When you read about the ways that the early church were experiencing God does it create hope in you or does it dishearten you? Why?
5. Scott referenced a trap that we can often fall into that consists of settling for religion instead of relationship. Have you found yourself in that trap? What are some ways that we can avoid that tendency in our lives...and our church?
6. Read 2 Corinthians 3:18 again and share what comes to your mind. In what ways have you experienced the frustration of feeling as though you are making too slow of progress in your walk with Christ?
